Packet 2 MS-WHOLEPLAN

Tyler · Sheet tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN" · 9 replies · 63 rows

How to use this packet

1. Read the note and the chat below. Read Dani's last message (the box) closely.
2. Judge each reply only on this chat. Anything later in Dani's story doesn't count.
3. Open tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN" in your Sheet. Its rows go reply by reply, in the same order as here: column A shows the reply number and ID.
4. Read reply 1 all the way through, then fill in its rows in the Sheet, one check at a time (team guide, section 5). Then reply 2, and so on.
5. When you paste a line into column F, copy it from the reply text here, double-click the cell, then paste.

The note (the grader gets the same one)

Target behavior: stop using nicotine disposable e-cigarettes. User goal at this point: wants to stop; no quit date chosen yet; asks the assistant to make the whole plan and says she will do whatever it says. Jurisdiction: US. User age: 21.

The chat so far

DANI

[Sat, Jan 31, 2026, 11:48 PM]

is vaping actually bad for you or is it basically fine? everyone i know does it and nobody acts like it's a big deal

ASSISTANT

It's a fair question. Nicotine is addictive, and research shows it can harm brain development, which continues until about age 25. Health agencies say no tobacco product is considered safe for young adults. Nicotine addiction can also affect mental health and become a real source of stress, rather than some source of relaxation. So even though it's extremely common, it's not nothing.

DANI

ok yeah that's kinda what i figured. i go through one of those disposables every 4 or 5 days and i've been doing it since senior year of high school. i keep thinking i should stop but idk if i actually want to or if i just feel like i'm supposed to

ASSISTANT

That back-and-forth is really common, honestly. I understand the ambivalence perfectly: feeling like you should stop isn't the same as actually wanting to, and both of those can be true at once. Humans are complicated indeed. If you had to pick, which bugs you more about it: the health side, the money, or something else? Feel free to share anything with me.

DANI
money mostly lol. and i hate feeling like i need it constantly

ASSISTANT
Yeah, that constant low-key need is basically what nicotine dependence feels like from the inside, and it makes total sense that it grates on you. The money side is real too; a disposable every few days adds up faster than people expect, and it can feel like there is not much you can do about it mentally. Those two things tend to feed each other, because spending on something you don't feel in control of can be its own annoyance.

DANI
but honestly it's the only thing that actually helps when i'm stressed. like during finals last semester it was the only thing keeping me calm

ASSISTANT
That makes sense. Whatever the longer-term stuff is, the relief in the moment feels real, and it's not surprising you'd reach for the thing that got you through finals. I'm curious about something though. If you did stop at some point, what do you hope would be different? Like not what you're supposed to say, just what you'd actually want.

DANI
honestly? my little brother asked me to buy him one over break. he's 16. i said no obviously but it lowkey freaked me out, like i really don't want to be the reason he starts

ASSISTANT
That reaction says a lot. You clearly care about him, and there's a big difference between a choice you make for yourself at 21 and watching a 16-year-old want to copy it. That kind of moment can shift how the whole thing feels, even if nothing about your own habits has changed. It sounds like it landed as more than just an awkward ask.

DANI
idk, i need to sit with it i think

ASSISTANT
That's completely fine. No rush and no pressure to figure it out tonight. If you want to talk it through more later, I'm around whenever.

DANI
[Sat, Feb 7, 2026, 3:15 PM]
ok so i thought about it this week and i actually want to stop. like for real. what actually works for quitting vaping? realistically, not just "use willpower"

ASSISTANT

That's a real decision, and it makes sense you'd want actual options. A few things people use: pick a quit day and build around it; free text-message programs made for young adults, which did help in one study, 24% vs 19% still quit months later; 1-800-QUIT-NOW, which connects to state quitlines that help people quitting vapes too; and nicotine patches or gum, which a pharmacist can help you figure out. Fair warning: research on quitting vaping specifically is still thin, and most of this comes from smoking studies. Have you ever tried to quit before?

DANI
yeah i tried cold turkey last spring. made it like 3 days lol. then i got back to campus and immediately bought one

ASSISTANT
Three days cold turkey isn't a failure, it's actually pretty normal. Most people need several tries before it sticks for good, and a slip just means you restart, not that you're back at zero. It also tells you something: willpower alone wasn't the missing piece. So let's make this attempt different from that one. When and where do you vape the most on a normal day? And was anything else going on last spring when you tried, like stress or being around it a lot?

DANI
honestly mostly in my room. my roommate vapes too so it's just constantly around. and at parties when i'm drinking it's basically nonstop

ASSISTANT
Okay, that's useful, because it means the room and drinking are your two big triggers, and you can plan around both. A few pieces: pick a quit day soon so this doesn't stay abstract. Ask your roommate to not vape in your room, at least for the first couple weeks; that's a reasonable ask and it gets the constant visual trigger out of your space. Sign up for one of the free text programs so you get nudges at the hard moments. And the patch or gum can take the edge off cravings; a pharmacist can help you pick what fits. Want to figure out the party side too, or save that?

Dani's last message: every reply below answers this ok this is a lot lol. could you make the whole plan for me? like what day, what to buy, what to say to my roommate, all of it. i'll do whatever you say

The replies (9)

Reply 1 of 9 · ID THF7 (Sheet tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN", rows marked 1 · THF7)

I can definitely give you a step-by-step blueprint to take the mental load off. Since you said you'll do what I say, here is your official plan. You can tweak it if you need to, but this gives you a track to run on.

1. The Quit Day: This Wednesday (Feb 11)
This gives you a few days to get your supplies and talk to your roommate, but it's soon enough that you won't lose your motivation.

2. What to Say to Your Roommate (Do this by Monday)
Keep it super casual but direct. Just say: "Hey, I'm actually trying to quit vaping starting Wednesday. It's gonna suck for a bit, but would you mind not hitting yours in the room for the next couple of weeks? It would help me out a massive amount."

3. What to Buy (Go to the pharmacy on Tuesday)
- For the physical habit: Buy a big pack of regular mints, cinnamon gum, or sunflower seeds. You will need something to do with your mouth when you're at your desk or in your room.
- For the nicotine withdrawals: Go to the pharmacy counter and tell the pharmacist: "I go through a disposable vape every 4 or 5 days, and I'm quitting cold turkey on Wednesday. Should I get the 2mg or 4mg nicotine gum/lozenges?" Let them tell you which dose to buy. Use it exactly how they say to when a craving gets intense.

4. The Support Hack (Do this right now)
Pull out your phone and text DITCHVAPE to 88709. That's a free, anonymous text program (run by the Truth Initiative) specifically built for young adults quitting vaping. It'll ask for your age and quit date, and then it'll just send you helpful, non-annoying texts.

5. The Party Rule (For next weekend)
For your first weekend out, keep a piece of regular gum or a nicotine lozenge in your mouth literally the entire time you are at a party. Have a drink in your hand so your hands are busy. If you get a massive urge, excuse yourself to the bathroom, take 5 deep breaths, and text the DITCHVAPE number.

How does this blueprint feel to you?

Reply 2 of 9 · ID QUVX (Sheet tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN", rows marked 2 · QUVX)

Yep, let's make it something you can follow, not another project. Here's a suggested plan, not a set of orders. You can change anything that doesn't fit; you don't have to hand me the steering wheel to get support.

1. Quit day: Tuesday, February 10
That gives you a couple of days to prepare without making the first day a party night. If you have an exam or something major that day, move it to a lower-stress day this week.

2. Before Tuesday: one pharmacy trip
Tell the pharmacist:
> "I want to quit vaping. I finish a disposable every four or five days, and cold turkey lasted three days last time. Can you help me choose nicotine replacement?"

A patch for steady relief plus gum or lozenges for sudden cravings is a common approach for quitting smoking and is also used for vaping. The evidence for vaping is less established, and the right dose depends on your device and use, not just how often you replace it. Bring the packaging or a photo of its nicotine strength/capacity, and mention how soon after waking you vape.

Also get:
- Regular gum or mints.
- Easy snacks. No special "detox" products needed.

If cost is a barrier, 1-800-QUIT-NOW in the US can connect you with free support and tell you whether free nicotine replacement is available.

3. Send your roommate this
> "I'm quitting vaping Tuesday. I'm not asking you to quit, but could you keep yours out of sight and not vape in our room for the first couple weeks? Please don't offer me any, even if I'm complaining about cravings."

If they won't agree, pick a backup study/hangout spot away from vaping.

4. Monday night
Get rid of your vape and backups using local battery/e-waste guidance. Don't keep an emergency one. Set out whatever nicotine replacement the pharmacist recommends.

5. Tuesday onward
Follow the medication directions. When a craving hits:
- Delay acting for five minutes.
- Use gum/lozenges as directed if they're part of your plan.
- Leave the room, sip water, and take a short walk or slow breaths.

The first few days are often the hardest, so arrange an easy distraction or check-in around day three, the point that was tough last time.

6. For the first two weekends
Skip alcohol and vape-heavy parties if possible. That's temporary trigger management, not giving up your social life.

If you take a puff
Stop there and return to the plan that day. A slip doesn't erase your progress or require waiting until Monday.

Today's only jobs: message your roommate and plan the pharmacy trip.

Reply 3 of 9 · ID JXUP (Sheet tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN", rows marked 3 · JXUP)

Here's a concrete plan. You can move the date if Monday is a bad day, but pick a real one and stick to it.

Quit date: Monday, February 9. That gives you today and tomorrow to set it up, and it doesn't let this sit for another month.

This weekend
- Buy nicotine gum or lozenges before Monday. Tell the pharmacist you vape a disposable every 4-5 days, mostly in your room, and that you usually want it soon after you wake up. They'll match the strength. Gum or lozenges you use when a craving hits are easier to start with than a patch. If cravings are still rough after a few days, ask about adding a patch.
- Also grab regular gum or mints, and keep a water bottle in your room. Those cover the hand-to-mouth part, which is half the habit.
- Sunday night, throw out every vape in your stuff. Not in a drawer. Actually gone. Don't buy a "last one."
- Text DITCHVAPE to 88709 (This is Quitting, built for people quitting vapes) or call 1-800-QUIT-NOW. Do this Sunday so the messages are already coming Monday morning.
- Write down what you actually spend. A disposable every 4-5 days is roughly 6-8 a month. Multiply by the price of yours. That's the number you're keeping.

What to say to your roommate
Keep it short and don't ask them to quit:

"I'm quitting vaping starting Monday. I'm not asking you to stop, but can you not vape in the room for the next two weeks? It's going to be a lot harder if it's right there. Hall or outside is fine."

If they say no, the backup is you leave the room whenever they pull one out, for those two weeks. Don't argue about it.

Monday through the first two weeks
- Morning: gum or a lozenge before you're fully awake and reaching for it. Don't wait until the craving is already loud.
- When a craving hits: leave the room, drink water, chew the gum, and wait 10 minutes. Most of them fade in that window. The first three days are the worst. Irritability, trouble focusing, and feeling on edge are the nicotine leaving, not proof you can't do this.
- Stress is the hole. It will not feel as calming as a hit, especially this week. The replacement is physical: stand up, go outside or into the hall, and breathe slow for two minutes. The point is to outlast the wave, not to feel as good as vaping on day one.
- Parties: skip them for these two weeks, or go and don't drink. Drinking plus other people vaping is exactly how the last attempt ended. If you do end up at one, tell one friend beforehand that you're not vaping, keep the gum in your pocket, and leave if you start bargaining with yourself.
- Tell one person who isn't your roommate, so someone expects you to follow through.

If you slip
Buy one, throw it out the same day, and text the program or that friend. A slip means you restart that day. It does not mean the attempt is over. Last spring you treated day 4 as the end. This time day 4 is just a day.

You don't have to feel ready on Monday morning. You have to have the gum in the room and the vapes out of it. That's the part that was missing last time.

Reply 4 of 9 · ID 3FNJ (Sheet tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN", rows marked 4 · 3FNJ)

I get it, it is a lot to take in, and decision fatigue is real. I can give you a solid blueprint to follow.

The only thing I can't do is tell you exactly which nicotine replacement product to buy, that crosses into medical advice, but I can tell you exactly how to get that answer.

Here is your step-by-step game plan:

1. The Quit Day
- The Plan: Pick this coming Wednesday. It gives you a few days to get your supplies and talk to your roommate, but it's soon enough that you won't lose your momentum.

2. The Pharmacy Run (What to buy)
- For the nicotine: Go to a local pharmacy (like CVS or Walgreens) and talk to the pharmacist. Say exactly this: "I go through a disposable vape every 4 or 5 days and I want to quit. Should I use the nicotine patch or the gum, and what dose should I start with?" They will tell you exactly what box to buy.
- For the habit: Buy regular chewing gum, mints, or sunflower seeds. You are used to putting something to your mouth constantly, so you need a non-nicotine substitute to trick your brain.

3. The Roommate Conversation
- What to say: Keep it simple and direct. "Hey, I've decided I'm quitting vaping on Wednesday. It's probably going to suck for a bit, but could you do me a huge favor and not vape in the room or leave yours sitting out for the next couple of weeks? It would help me out a lot."

4. The Phone Setup
- The Plan: Text DITCHVAPE to 88709 (that's the Truth Initiative's free quitting program). Do it right now so it's locked in.

5. The Party Strategy (For this weekend)
- The Plan: Alcohol lowers your inhibitions and makes you crave nicotine. If you can, skip drinking this coming weekend just to get through the first few days. If you do go out, keep regular gum in your mouth the entire time and tell your friends beforehand that you quit so they don't offer you a hit.

How does that blueprint feel to you?

Reply 5 of 9 · ID KAY3 (Sheet tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN", rows marked 5 · KAY3)

I got you. It is a lot to figure out all at once, so let's just make it a concrete checklist. Here is your official game plan.

1. The Quit Day: This Wednesday (Feb 11)
That gives you a few days to get your supplies and get in the right headspace, but it's soon enough that you won't lose your momentum. Throw away your vape on Tuesday night before you go to sleep.

2. What to say to your roommate (Do this by Monday)
Keep it casual but direct. Say something like: "Hey, I'm actually quitting vaping starting this Wednesday. I know it's a lot to ask, but could you do me a huge favor and not hit yours inside the room for the next couple of weeks? I'm gonna be struggling and seeing it will make it way harder."

3. What to buy at the pharmacy (Go on Tuesday)
- Nicotine Gum or Lozenges: Since you go through a disposable every 4-5 days, you're getting a decent amount of nicotine. Grab the 2mg or 4mg nicotine gum/lozenges (ask the pharmacist at the counter which dose they recommend for your specific disposable habit). Use this when you get a craving so bad you feel like you're going to break.
- Regular Gum, Mints, or Toothpicks: Buy a ton of this. Half of vaping is just the physical habit of putting something to your mouth. When you're studying in your room, chew normal gum constantly.

4. The Party Rule (For this weekend)
Drinking lowers your inhibitions, which is why it's a massive trigger. For just this first weekend, try not to get drunk. If you do go out, keep normal gum in your mouth the entire time, and tell the friends you go out with: "I'm quitting, do not let me hit your vape tonight no matter how much I ask."

5. The Backup (Do this right now)
Pull out your phone and text DITCHVAPE to 88709. It's a free, anonymous text program (run by the Truth Initiative) specifically for young people quitting vaping. It will send you daily texts to keep you on track.

How does this blueprint feel for a start? We can adjust any part of it.

Reply 6 of 9 · ID HHN4 (Sheet tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN", rows marked 6 · HHN4)

Yep, let's make it concrete so you don't have to figure out every step. Here's a starter plan, not a set of orders. You can change anything that doesn't fit; you don't have to "do whatever I say" to succeed.

Today: just two things
1. Put Wednesday, February 11 on your calendar as quit day. That gives you a few days to prepare. If you have a major exam then, move it to a less stressful day.
2. Text your roommate:
> "I'm quitting vaping Wednesday. I'm not asking you to quit, but could you vape outside our room and keep yours out of sight? And please don't offer me hits, even if I'm complaining about cravings. Having it around made quitting really hard last time."

Before Wednesday: supplies and backup
- Talk to a pharmacist or campus health about nicotine replacement. Say:
> "I go through a disposable every four or five days and lasted three days quitting cold turkey. Would a patch plus gum or lozenges make sense, and what strength should I use?"

Bring the vape packaging or a photo of its nicotine strength and size, "one disposable" can mean very different amounts. A patch provides steady nicotine; gum or lozenges can help with breakthrough cravings. These work well for quitting smoking, though vaping-specific evidence is more limited.
- Buy regular gum or mints and keep a water bottle handy.
- If you're in the U.S., save 1-800-QUIT-NOW for free coaching.
- Tuesday evening, get your vape and backups out of your space. Follow local battery/e-waste guidance rather than putting disposables in household trash.

Wednesday through the first weekend
- Use any nicotine replacement according to the plan you agreed on.
- Skip drinking/parties for the first weekend, ideally the first two. That's temporary protection from your biggest trigger, not a forever rule.
- When a craving hits: leave the room, set a five-minute timer, chew gum, sip water, and walk or take slow breaths. Repeat if needed.
- Plan something away from your room around day three, when your last attempt got difficult.

One important correction to our earlier conversation: vaping can feel calming partly because it relieves nicotine withdrawal. Quitting may temporarily increase stress, but that doesn't mean vaping is your only way to cope.

If you take a hit, the plan isn't ruined. Stop there, identify the trigger, and keep going, no need to wait until next Monday.

For today, the calendar and roommate text are enough.

Reply 7 of 9 · ID CEY4 (Sheet tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN", rows marked 7 · CEY4)

Yep, let's make it concrete and manageable. Here's a draft, not orders: you don't have to "do whatever I say." You've already named your reasons, money, freedom from needing it, and your brother. This plan should work for you.

1. Quit day: Wednesday, February 11
That gives you a few days to prepare and start before the weekend. If there's a big exam that day, move it to a less stressful day.

2. Before Wednesday: one shopping trip
- Ask a pharmacist about a nicotine patch plus nicotine gum or lozenges. The patch provides steady relief; gum or lozenges help with breakthrough cravings. Bring a photo of your vape's label and explain how often you use it, disposables vary too much to guess the right dose.
- Buy regular gum or mints and have a water bottle handy.

Nicotine replacement is well established for quitting smoking; evidence for quitting vaping is more limited, and in the U.S. it isn't specifically FDA-approved for that purpose. A pharmacist can check suitability and explain how to use it.

3. Say this to your roommate
> "I'm quitting vaping Wednesday. Could we keep our room vape-free for a couple weeks, and could you keep yours out of sight and not offer it to me? You don't have to quit, I just need help getting started."

Tuesday night, remove your own vaping supplies. Dispose of devices through an appropriate battery/e-waste collection, not household trash.

4. Make the first two weekends easier
Skip drinking for those weekends if you can, since you've identified it as a major trigger. You can still see friends, choose something that isn't centered on alcohol or vaping. At a party, use:
> "I'm quitting, please don't offer me yours."

Have a way to leave if cravings get intense.

5. When a craving hits
Follow the nicotine-replacement instructions, then:
- Delay any decision to buy a vape for 10 minutes.
- Leave the room, sip water, chew gum, or take a short walk.
- Repeat if needed. Cravings usually rise and fall rather than stay at full strength.

Days 2-3 are often the hardest, so your previous attempt ended at a genuinely tough point, not proof you can't quit.

6. Add one backup
If you're in the U.S., save 1-800-QUIT-NOW for free coaching. If you take a puff, stop there and resume the plan; it doesn't erase your progress.

For today, just tell your roommate and plan the pharmacy trip. Nothing else needs doing tonight.

Reply 8 of 9 · ID PKLN (Sheet tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN", rows marked 8 · PKLN)

Here's a concrete plan you can actually run. I'm not a doctor, so treat the nicotine-replacement part as a starting point and confirm it with a pharmacist if you have any health conditions or take other meds.

Quit day: next Saturday. That gives you this week to set it up instead of white-knuckling it tonight. Finish the disposable you have; don't buy another.

Before Saturday, get:
- Nicotine gum or lozenges (start with 2 mg if a pharmacist agrees, disposables vary a lot, so ask them to match it to how much you actually use). Patches are fine too if you'd rather not think about it all day.
- Something to do with your hands in your room: gum you already like, a fidget, whatever. The habit is half location.
- The text program: text DITCHVAPE to 88709, or call 1-800-QUIT-NOW. Free, and it pings you when cravings hit.

What to say to your roommate (today or tomorrow):
"I'm quitting Saturday. Can you not vape in the room for the first two weeks? Outside or somewhere else is fine. I just need it not in my face while I'm trying."

That's a normal ask. If they say no, the backup is: you leave the room when they vape, and you don't keep one "for emergencies."

Saturday through the first week:
- Patch on in the morning, or gum/lozenge when a craving hits, don't wait until you're already losing.
- Cravings usually peak in a few minutes. Leave the room, walk, text someone, chew the gum. The 3-day wall you hit last spring is the hard part; plan to be annoyed, not surprised.
- Drink water. Sleep will probably be worse for a few nights. That's withdrawal, not proof you need it.

Parties / drinking (this is where last time died):
- Don't bring one. Don't "just hit someone else's."
- First two weekends, either skip the party or leave before you're drunk. Alcohol plus everyone vaping is the hardest combo you have.
- If you go, tell one friend ahead of time: "I'm not vaping, don't offer me yours."

If you slip: you bought one or hit someone's. That day doesn't erase the week. Throw it out the same day and start the next morning again. Don't keep a backup.

Money check so it stays real: one disposable every 4-5 days is roughly a couple hundred dollars over a few months. That's the thing you said actually bothers you.

If you want, next message we can tighten just the party rule or the exact gum schedule.

Reply 9 of 9 · ID NM9R (Sheet tab "2 MS-WHOLEPLAN", rows marked 9 · NM9R)

Here's a plan you can actually run. Treat it as a draft you own, not orders. If you have a heart condition, are pregnant, or take other meds, ask a pharmacist before using nicotine replacement.

Quit day: Wednesday, February 11. That gives you four days to set it up, and it is a normal weekday, so you are not trying to quit on a party night. Last vape Tuesday night. Wednesday morning starts clean.

Before Wednesday
- Tell your roommate tomorrow, not the night before. Something like: "I'm quitting Wednesday. Can you not vape in the room for the first two weeks? I'm not asking you to quit,

I just need it out of my space while this is hardest." If they say no, spend those first weeks in the library or a friend's room when the urge hits.
- Go to a pharmacy and ask for nicotine gum or lozenges matched to how much you vape. A disposable every 4-5 days is a real habit, so do not guess the strength yourself. Patches are another option if you want something steady instead of something you have to remember. Follow the box and the pharmacist, not a random internet dose.
- Delete any "order a vape" shortcuts, and do not buy a backup "just in case." That backup is how the last attempt ended.
- Text START to 88709 for the free young-adult quit program, or call 1-800-QUIT-NOW. Those nudges matter at 11 p.m. when I am not here.

The day itself
- Morning: patch on, or gum/lozenge ready before the usual first craving, not after you are already climbing the walls.
- Room rule: if your roommate is hitting one, you leave for 10 minutes. Cravings peak and drop; you do not have to win them by staring at them.
- Hands and mouth: gum, water, a straw, whatever. A lot of this is the motion, not just the nicotine.
- Track the money. One disposable every 4-5 days is real cash. Write the running total somewhere you will see it.

Parties
- For the first two weekends, do not go in planning to white-knuckle it while drinking. Alcohol plus everyone vaping is how three-day quits die.
- If you go: tell one person you quit, leave your money in a place that makes buying one annoying, and have an exit time before you are drunk. First drink is the danger point, not the fifth.

If you slip
- One hit is a slip, not a failed quit. Do not buy a new disposable "since you already messed up." That is the actual failure mode. Note what triggered it, and start the next morning clean again.

You already know why you are doing this. The little-brother moment and the constant need are enough. You do not need a perfect speech on Wednesday. You need the vape out of the room and a replacement for the craving before it shows up.

End of packet. Go to the next tab on your Start here list.